Self, Identity, and Career

Professor Dana YGil
dyagil@research.haifa.ac.il
Semester: 2019
Credits: 4, and Credits: 1230-1600

The answers to the question "Who am I?" reflect the concept of self and our identity. In this course, we focus on the aspects of self and identity related to the workplace. We examine different types of identity and examine how identity changes, whether as a result of daily events such as moving from work to home, and due to more unique events such as pregnancy, loss, or moving between roles and workplaces.

The course is designed to provide students with knowledge about the relationship between the identity of employees and the workplace environment, and to enable in-depth study in one aspect of the world of work related to identity, such as self-presentation in job interviews, socialization in organizations, stigmas, technological changes.

Topics:
- Basic concepts of self and identity theories
- Organizational identity
- Professional identity and reputation
- The struggle with identity threats
- Identity and employment relationships
- Composition: Attendance: 10%
  Exercises (Passed/Failed): 10%
  Work: 80%
  Reading:

